URGENT APPEAL FOR A NEW GRAPEVINE EDITOR

We are looking for a new editor or editors to take over the Grapevine each month and hopefully aim to create a much better and exciting publication for all its readers!

The physical making of the Grapevine is extremely easy if you have basic IT skills and it doesn't take up much time at all. We are looking to source more news, articles and pictures to bring it up to a decent standard for printing each month.

If you are interested and would be kind enough to help, please contact me and I can provide more details about what it entails.

Ah, September.

The season of mists and mellow fruitfulness is upon us.
The month that ushers in the shifting of the seasons...
The month I think I might just love the most.
The orchards are being picked and packed. The blackberries are warm and sweet, nourished by the summer sun. I may need a cardigan in the morning but its barefoot paddling weather again by the afternoon.
And yet, on the furthest periphery of my emotional vision, barely within my grasp, is the oncoming hint of something else... Even as we soak in the warm glow of the afternoon sunshine, we feel the gentle chill now in the morning air, whispering to us of season's end... The gardens are just tipping over from the peak of summer glory, still beautiful but more rugged now. My heart feels what my eyes can't yet see...

We know that in September, we will wander through the warm winds of summer's wreckage. We will welcome summer's ghost (Henry Rollins)

'Not so fast!' is the cry of my heart 'I'm not ready yet!'
And yet, September still comes, lightly tapping on my shoulder, reminding me that things end - and things begin - whether I'm ready for them or not.
The writer of the book of Ecclesiastes wrestles with the human state – our limitations, our finiteness - and, in it, are some very well-known words of wisdom (often attributed to The Byrds!)
To everything there is a season,
and a time for every purpose under heaven:
a time to be born and a time to die,
a time to plant and a time to uproot,
a time to kill and a time to heal,
a time to break down and a time to build,
a time to weep and a time to laugh,
a time to mourn and a time to dance,
a time to cast away stones and a time to gather stones together,
a time to embrace and a time to refrain from embracing,
a time to search and a time to count as lost,
a time to keep and a time to discard,
a time to tear and a time to mend,
a time to be silent and a time to speak,
a time to love and a time to hate,
a time for war and a time for peace.

There is a time for everything. There is a time for summer. And a time for September.
And so, as we embark on this new month and wander into this new season together, may we carry the warmth of summer with us and may we embrace the new adventure and joy of the season to come.
